

ELCA Domestic Disaster Response: Southern California wildfires

In October 2007, more than 20 wildfires, fueled by strong winds and dry conditions, spread over areas of Southern California. It is estimated that nearly 1 million people were ordered to evacuate and over a thousand homes were destroyed.

The affected areas of Southern California are home to people of all economic classes. Disasters are especially devastating to vulnerable populations, such as people living in poverty or with disabilities.

Lutheran Disaster Response is assessing the needs of affected communities. Meanwhile, chaplains are providing spiritual and emotional care to evacuees at area shelters. Long-term response efforts will focus on populations that have limited access to resources for rebuilding homes and livelihoods.

Your gifts to ELCA Domestic Disaster Response help those recovering from disasters through hardship grants, spiritual and emotional care, volunteer coordination, and long-term recovery and rebuilding. Donations designated for “Southern California Wildfires” will be used in full—100 percent—to help families and communities recover from the fires. Learn more by visiting www.elca.org/disaster
